This frame house faces south. In its present form, a 2 1/2 story, three-bay-wide by two-bay-deep section in which the ridge of the gable roof runs perpendicular to the principal (south) facade is intersected by a two story, two-bay-wide, one room deep wing extending from the west. The building is uniformly sheathed in novelty siding, with patterned asphalt covering the roof. The roof exhibits considerable overhang at the gables. An interior end chimney rises from the peak of the west gable.

The principal facade has the entrance in the central bay of the east (gable-front) section. The door is surmounted by a two-pane transom and flanked by tall 4/4 sash windows. Three lower 4/4 sash windows on the second story are aligned over the first-floor openings; a four-pane case-ment centered in the peak of the gable lights the attic. Fenestration of the two bays of the west wing repeats this pattern, with tall 4/4 sash on the first floor and lower windows directly above. Two square case-ments, each with three tall, narrow panes, pierce the west gable at the first floor level. All windows have molded cornices.

A one-story, half-hipped porch, its roof covered with patterned asphalt and supported on chamfered columns with sawn and turned stickwork brackets, spans the east sections; a trellis encloses the east end of this porch. A similar porch across the west wing occupies the crook of the "L"; its roof is covered with standing-seam metal and rests on turned posts with stickwork brackets.

A large frame bank barn with an unsupported forebay stands to the west of the house. Noteworthy exterior architectural features include six lowered ventilators arrayed across the south facade, and a pair of louvered cupolas rising from the ridge of the roof. The barn is in excellent condition.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

These structures are significant as well-preserved examples of large, late-19th century vernacular buildings. The house's gable facade with a central entrance is unusual for a rural dwelling.
